More Real Beauties Here Than in Other Cities, And More Pretty Girls, Too, Eugenist Declares

Unique Investigation Included Pulchritude and Curves and Attracted Sufficient Attention to Be Recorded.

To cut a long story short, there are nore pretty girls in Washington than a any other American city. But the long story is worth telling. The foregoing hint is thrown in-"to the reader's attention," thought we were going to say. Nay. To prove to the copy reader that we have caught, clinched, nailed down the reader's attention. (This story is not by Gardner, Mack). So even now we may be nipped in the bud.

Now for the real start. The worm will turn. In more scien-The worm will turn. In more scientific parlance (for this is to be a scientific story, with Sir Francis Galton and David Fairchild all mixed up in it) the invertebrate animal of the group vermes will perform his ultimate ul-which is to say, that was the "start" we planned. For a long communication concerning the tabulated pulchritude of all beauties seen on F street came in on the afternoon mail, signed by Dr. F. de Este Bastante, and it was not until we had called up the Argentine embassy that we found the esteemed Dr. Bastante was in the purple cow class, and we gave up hope of seeing one. And our Spanish authority clinched this suspicion by translating the signature into "Which is enough of this," meaning, "enough is a-plenty."

You remember that Sir Francis Galon really did prowl about London and dinburgh and Aberdeen and Devondre with a paper and a pin, pricking e he saw. With unusual graciousness for a scientist this particular "purple cow" (whuse name is omitted because we are not yet sure whether he is "kidding" us or we are jollying him) states: "I may addinat I have independently confirmed Galton's results; and that London comes lose after Edinburgh, while Devonshire Ivals Aberdeen in its notable lack of creetty faces."

It would seem that a eugenist, until he gets in the Galton class, retains traces of a sense of humor. (This is a strictly scientific observation on our Evidences of Unrest and Discontent Bring Home to Mothers the Need of Understanding the Possibilities of Controlling the Future, Says Mrs. Dubois.

Heredity, one of the master influences controlling man, is being understood by scientist and physician. It is for the mother to know herself, to know her power of controlling this great force, says Mrs. Dubois, in order to realize the measure of her responsibility to the Many there are who pay the penalty of another's wrongs. To such, she says, we owe much; for reformatory, juvenile court, and institution for the unfortunate are evidences of unrest and discontent.

MRS. DUBOIS, and our very unrest and discontent is the most hopeful sign of our progress.

The necessary effort on this line by women should be the cultivation of a scientific motherhood, which shall, in time, correct the errors of the past and rede the future by penetrating the my eries of hered-ity and by learning to control its possibilities.

Women Must Give Knowledge. The scientist and the learned physician know something of these hidden mysteries, but their knowledge avails but little to the human race so long as woman, the laboratory in which the wonders and erform, remains nerself in ignorance of her power to assist in controlling it. Woman should know her wonderful self, and realize the massure of her responsibility to the future. By the light of scientific knowledge.

The youngster ran away, and the lame lad with difficulty gethered together his papers. I meditated upon the boy's feelings, and their lives arrogant, selfish cruel-hearted,

I was sitting in the depot one evening when a frightfully crippied woman, shaking with palsy, came in. Her companion, an old lady with rheumatism, was her only help. They had two neavy bags and they were so confused. I feared they would miss their train, which was about to leave. I arose to help them, when a young boy came forward, saying: "Allow mt."

He came back after putting them upon the train and said: "It is pitiful for two such old ladies to be alone and crippled."

My heart warmed over such tenderness in youth. I thought some mother or father can be proud of their training.
